

THE DOS AND DON'TS FOR MULTI-USER LICENSES

A multi-user license authorizes you to:

- Provision of internal access within the company
- Storage on the company's network drives or servers
- Provision of access via standards management tools (e.g. effects 2.0)
- Provision of access via document management systems (e.g. EDM or DMS such as Microsoft SharePoint, Xerox DocuShare, IBM FileNet, etc.)
- Publication on the (exclusively internal) intranet
- Transfer by e-mail to the company's employees
- Passing on by means of data media (memory sticks, CDs, etc.) to the company's employees
- Repeated printing or copying of standards for internal company usage
- Digitization (scanning, copying, photographing, etc.) for internal company purposes
- Editing of standards within the company
- Partial or complete usage of standards (text, tables, graphics, images, etc.) in internal company documents that go beyond the scope of a citation
- Partial or complete translation into other languages for internal company purposes

Not covered by a multi-user license and thus copyright infringement:

- Publication on websites on the internet
- Taking over of text from standards in documents which are shared with external parties
- Transfer of standards by e-mail or passing on by means of data media to external parties
- Translation into other languages not contractually negotiated with Austrian Standards
- Presentation of content from standards to external parties
- Publication of a book which takes over content from standards, that goes beyond a quotation

Special agreements are required for such usage!
